

Washington University School of Law
New York Regulatory and Business Externship - Spring Semester 2016
Placement: New York State Attorney General's Economic Justice Division

New York Regulatory and Business Externship students have the opportunity to learn first-hand about the practice of business associations and regulation in the nation's largest city. The externship allows third-year law students, and qualified second-year law students, to spend their spring semester in New York City working under the direction of attorneys in a variety of non-profit, government, and in-house counsel offices having an emphasis on business associations and regulation. These externships expose students to nonprofit and business associations, as well as regulatory environments, and students gain a level of experiential training and learning that will allow a more rapid, successful transition to practice.

Students are required to work full-time for 14 weeks at the placement site and will receive 11 academic credits (graded "credit/no credit"). Students will earn 3 additional credits for the companion externship course "Organization Integrity: Legal and Ethical Problems in Business. Students must have taken the Corporations survey course.

Placement at the New York Attorney General's Economic Justice Division focuses on the work of the New York Attorney General in enforcing laws relating to economic justice, such as the State's laws addressing securities, antitrust, and consumer and investor protection.

The five bureaus within the Economic Justice Division are:
